lo?" questioned some one of a squarejawed suffragist this morning.

"If you mean 'when the antis meet the pros," was the quick response, "we will do them up," to use your own vernacular, This is not a question of woman against woman, but of woman against society women. There are women who do not want to vote. We understand that, and we feel sorry for them. The more they remon-strate, the more they help us, for they show the vast difference between themwho like to help the old world move. Why fifty years ago, the woman who would have offered her services to come before Congress for anything would have been considered a subject for a straight jacket. We surragists have made that move possible for them. We came to Congress first, and now, they, just one step behind, as they always are, come to Congress after us. We may not win this year, but some day men will see the justice of our cause, and we will all stand equal before the law, because with the ballot in our hand, and the word 'male' elimited from the right to the franchise, we will be upon the same level, politically."

The foregoing is just preminingly to the great battle which will be fought under the dome of the national Capitol tomorrow. The women suffragists are in desperate earnest, and nothing daunts them. The fact that they will be confronted by a score of other women inst as earnest inst as an earnest inst as a line as in of other women just as sarnest, just as in-sistant, armed with eloquence and logic just as irresistible, who are protesting against the change in existing conditions, worries them not a bit. Miss Anthony looks at them not a tot. Miss Anthony looks at them in her superior way as though she might be saying, "You pore ignorant crit-ters, you," and Miss Shaw just smiles, while Mrs. Catt fixes her great gray blue eyes on the distance and talks on.

Miss Anthony's Policy.

But Miss Anthony isn't thinking anything mean. She meets her opponents squarely and says: "Now, girls, just go right on and remonstrate. I have broken the path for you, and it is not hard to tread. You are making it easier for others and you are learning what a power good women can be. I'd much rather you would remonstrate than do nothing. It is only when women settle into apathy that I fear or our cause."

And that simply takes the wind out of the

And that simply takes the wind out of the sails of the opposition.

The remonstrants have already spread their circulars around Congress. The suffragists did that some time ago. Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the congressional hearings for the suffragists will open. Thirteen women have been selected for the symposium—thirteen of the biggest-brained women in the organization. The man who piles them with questions will think he has been hit by a gatting gun when he gets his reply, for they are all primed for the occasion.

Miss Anthony will be the presiding officer of the six speakers who will appear before the Senate. Clara Bewick Colby will deliver an address on "Our Work Before Congress." "Limited Suffrage" will be looked after by Laura M. Johns. Mary C. C. Bradford. from Colorado, will tell of the "Results of Woman Suffrage in the Enfranchised States." Jessle Cassidy Saunders is to speak on "The Position of Women in Foreign Countries." and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of New York will speak upon "The Latest Phase of the Movement."

Those who will appear in the House will be under the guidance of Rev. Anna Howard Shaw. The speakers will be Harriet Stanton Blach, "The Political Position of Women in England;" Lillie Deversux Blake. "The Constitutional Argument: "Elizabeth Sheldon Tillinghast, "The Economic Basis of Suffrage;" Hala Hammond Butt. "The Changed Intellectual Qualifications of Women of This Country;" Catherine Waugh McCulloch, "The Changed Value of the Ballot." Rev. Anna Shaw will make the closing argument.

It is not known yet who will appear for It is not known yet who will appear for he remonstrants.

The Election of Officers.

Tomorrow afternoon will be given over to the election of officers of the associathe candidates for president. Rev. Anna Howard Shaw has had many requests to stand for election, but she steadily de stand for election, but she steadily de-clines, and prefers to give her support and that of her friends to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt. Dr. Shaw, as pastor of one of the largest churches in Philadelphia, and with a big course of lectures to make each year, feels that her time is too largely occupied for her to accept the high office

Mrs. Blake a Candidate

Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake has quite following, but she belongs to the "old" rowd, and there is a steadily growing eeling that the work needs younger hearts and newer methods. Mrs. Blake belongs to the pioneers in the work, though she is rounger now than Miss Anthony was when he accepted the presidency so many years ago. But then, many say, there are few Miss Anthonys. She is younger at eighty than most women at sixty. Mrs. Blake has lectured extensively throughout the United States and has a wide acquaintance, which would be valuable to the president of such

States and has a wide acquaintance, which would be valuable to the president of such an organization, but she is naturally a politician, her opponents say, and has always had a desire to lead the suffragists off into devious paths, and after democratic gods. Those whose devotion to the organization is unquestioned declare that to give the thing a political bias would be to undo all they have accomplished.

"We have left our members absolutely free as to religion and politics," said one, "and they may stand on any platform, all, or none, as they desire; accept or reject the teachings of the prophets and St. Paul, wear white ribbons, blue ones or black, just so they choose to wear our golden yellow, and work for the good of humanity, but we do insist that they shall not discuss their politics or their religion when standing before a suffrage audience. They are free agents, within certain limitations, elsewhere."

thony desires the election of Mrs. Chapman Catt. The fact that Elizabeth Cady Stan-ton has seen fit to champion Mrs. Blake Catt. The fact that Elizabeth Cady Stanton has seen fit to champion Mrs. Blake does not cut much lee, it is declared, for she long ago retired from active participation in the suffrage work, and, it is claimed, knows but little about the advance in methods and the necessity for injecting new blood into the association. She and Miss Anthony have been lifelong friends, and her reminiscences are dedicated to the great apostle of suffrage, but she and Miss Anthony have often differed in policy, and to such an extent that in 1872 Mrs. Stanton and Isabella Beeecher Hooker flocked by themselves in a new "woman's party" which was to make a political field for itself. They tried to drag Miss Anthony off with them, it is alleged, but she refused to go. Victoria Woodhull captured the presidency of the new party, and that, it is now declared, would have been a deathblow to suffrage. Mrs. Stanton and Mrs. Hooker saw their mistake in time, but both went off on various occasions, on various themes, and had to come back and be scoided by Miss Anthony, so Mrs. Stanton has not always been considered as safely conservative a leader as she might be.

The last thing that Mrs. Stanton is said to have done to torment the organization, which is really the apple of her eye, was to precipitate an angry controversy over her "Woman's Bible." Mrs. Blake was her GREEK MEETS GREEK friends say, and it was only upon earnest solicitation that she was induced to stand solicitation that she was induced to stand organization work a few years back-less than five—there were no state organizations to speak of, and the income of the association was less than $2,000 a year. She has now organized forty states into fiourishing associations, which send delegates regularly to the national body, and she has brought the income of the association up to $15,000 a year. She has traveled over 50,000 miles to do all this, and she has never drawn a cent of salary and has paid her own expenses. She has tremendous will power, an iron constitution and great executive ability. She has also money, which she spends freely for the cause. This Miss Anthony considers a great desideratum.

"The president of this organization should be a rich woman," she says. "Her hand must be forever in her pocket." Mrs. Catt's husband is willing to back her to any extent, for he is proud of his wife and her success in her chosen calling. organization work a few years back-less

Amendments to Constitution. The interest of the morning session was entered in the proposed amendments to the constitution which were to be voted on centered in the proposed amendments to the constitution which were to be voted on after the noon hour. The first amendment, proposed by Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, was the most prominent, because in its way it was not unlike the Goebel law, in that, according to the opinion of many, it was framed for the purpose of giving her the power in the convention to secure her own election. As the constitution now stands, one delegate may cast the votes, by proxy, of her entire delegation, though all her co-delegates be absent. This is so framed that it works no hardship to the far-away states of Oregon, Washington and California. The eastern states can have most of their delegates present, but the distant states send one representative, and direct her to cast the ballot of the state as she sees fit.

Mrs. Blake's amendment to this section is: "But no person shall cast more than one ballot for the election of any officer."

Mrs. Blake proposes that this amendment shall go into effect at once. This would practically cut the west out of the many votes, and tend to throw the power of the convention to Mrs. Blake for president, as she is much stronger in the east than in the west. Of course there was fur flying in a moment after the president submitted the proposed amendment. There were all kinds of motions, few of them parliamentary. Some thought that such amandments could not take effect at once, and a great many said they would take effect itll the next convention. This raised another storm of questions, and Miss Anthony said calmly: "I have ruled on the question. If any of you want to take an appeal, you can take it. That is your privilege." But no appeal was taken at that time.

Circular Distributed.

Circular Distributed. Mrs. Blake had a circular distributed this norning giving her ideas of why a secret ballot should be had and favoring such ar mendment. She thought it clothed a deleamendment. She thought it clothed a delegate with too much power to give her half a dozen votes, and then giving her the further power to get up in convention and cast those votes. She wanted a secret ballot, so as to destroy this invidious power. As The Star closed its report, the convention was wrangling over the matter, with the probability that Mrs. Blake's amendment would be lost. The other amendments were of no particular moment, the only important one being a clause which omits from the list of committees that on enrollment and adding one on organization.

from the list of committees that on enrollment and adding one on organization.

Miss Anthony made a brief report on the work done by the congressional committee. This committee had done all it could in distributing suffrage literature among the members of Congress, and had brought to bear all the strength and power in their possession. They could only judge by results whether anything had been accomplished.

"I have waited fifty years for results from some of my work," Miss Anthony said. "That is a long time for bread to float on the waters, but results are comfloat on the waters, but results are com-ing. We see this every day."

No Cause for Worry. Mrs. A. V. Noerr of the suffrage asso ciation of the District of Columbia wanted to know what would be done about the 'remonstrants," whom, she said, were distributing their literature about Congress. "I have seen no 'remonstrants,' said Miss Anthony. "They do not come near me. I wish they would. I should be delighted to talk to them. They seem to be very timid about meeting us face to face." The more prominent suffragists are much amused at the idea that they are "worried" over the action of the remonstrants. One said this morning:

ried" over the action of the remonstrants. One said this morning:

"Why, we are perfectly delighted to have them come. This is the first time they have had the temerity to come to Congress.

"They must be getting worried, it seems to me, when they leave their pink teas and their progressive euchre parties, right in the close of the season, too, to come here among a lot of horrid men to protest against us having a confidential chat with our fathers and sons. There is nothing new in the literature they are sending out. It is exactly the same stuff they started with in 1884. They have exhausted all argument in that one set of papers." nument in that one set of papers

They congratulate women on the gains made in the suffrage movement in the past fifty years, and protest against women being made the basis of representation in the state and nation, and then depriving them of the right to vote for their representatives. They rejoice in the ratification of The Hague peace treaty by the United States Senate, and recommend that a concentrated effort be made next year to secure from the respective legislatures woman's right to vote in presidential elections. These were adopted unanimously and without discussion.

A Tribute to Miss Anthony. The last resolution which was adopted by

We congratulate her upon her eightleth birthday, and trust she will add to her past illustrious services her aid and support to the younger workers for woman's enfranchisement. We shall continue to look to her as our counselor and adviser in the years to come. May the new century witness the full fruition of our labors."

Death of a Member. Mrs. Swift of California announced to the convention the death of Dr. Elizabeth Sar-geant of California, daughter of the late Senator Sargeant of that state. Miss Anthony was visibly moved and could scarcely control her voice while speaking of the bright young woman whose useful career had been so suddenly cut short. She had been one of Miss Anthony's pets and was an ardent worker in the cause of equal rights.

Saturday Evening Session.

The Saturday evening session was presided over by Misa Anthony, who began the proceedings by reading a telegram from the national anti-trust conference, which will hold a meeting in Chicago on Lincoln's birthday. The message was as follows:

"The executive committee of the meaning of the me birthday. The message was as follows:

'The executive committee of the national anti-trust conference, which will convene at Chicago on Lincoin's birthday, February 12, 'extends hearty congratulations to the distinguished president of the Woman Suffrage Association, and hopes that Miss Anthony many enjoy many years of added happiness and honor."

Miss Anthony aist read a letter from Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of blaber. The letter contained a resolution which was passed by the convention recently held at Detroit, reciting that disfranchised labor, like that of enslaved, degrades all free and enfranchised labor; therefore if The American Erderption of Labor earnestly appeals to Congress to pass a resonestly appeals to Congress to pass a resonestly appeals to Congress to pass a resonestly appeals

After concluding the feading of the telegram and the letter, Miss Anthony told of the manner in which she had obtained recognition of the various organizations which were holding conventions in the different cities. It was done, she said, by sending letters to the presidents asking for recognition. "In almost every instance," said Miss Anthony, "I received encouraging replies, and this telegram and letter which I had read is the result of that effort." Hearty applause greeted the reading of the communications.

List of Speakers.

List of Speakers. The first speaker of the evening was Clara Bewick Colby of Nebraska on "Our Great Leaders." Mrs. Colby reviewed the work of the great woman leaders in thought and ac-

Miss Kate M. Gordon of Louisiana gave an account of the reforms which were traceable to the efforts of woman's suffrage in Louisiana. The address was on a "Scrap of Suffrage."

The evening collection was taken at the conclusion of Miss Gordon's address. This part of the session is always the signal for the audience to enjoy some of Miss Anthony's quaint humor. She selects the delegates to make the collection announcement. Last night it was Mrs. Annie Diggs, state librarian of Kansas. Mrs. Diggs made the object of her mission known by saying that she helicated in 16 to 16 ment. Last night it was Mrs. Annie Diggs, state librarian of Kansas. The speaker said in part: "Wage earner among women is used in a broad sense. All women receiving money payment for work are proud to be called wage earners, because wage earning means economic independence. The 1890 census reports nearly 400 occupations open to women and 3,914,571 women engaged in gainful occupations. Government reports show the average wages of women in large cities to be from $3.83 to $6.91 per week, and the general average to be from $5 to $6.68.
"In all lines women are paid less than men for the same grade of work. We need organization, suffrage, co-operation by all women, and, above all, the inculcation of the principle that a woman is an individual with a right to choose her work and with equal rights with man."

Gives a Review.

The last speaker of the evening was Mrs. Helen Adelaide Shaw of Massachusetts. Her text was "A Review of the Remon-

In deploring the attitude of hostility toward the remonstrates which is taken by many friends of suffrage she said:
"Part of the avowed purpose of those who are working for equal suffrage is to broaden the minds of women which have broaden the minds of women which have been for ages under the most adverse conditions. The remonstrants represent one result of those very conditions. They are a symptom and an illustration of the ills we hope to cure; and for us to be sarcastic or even irritated about their proceedings seems to me as if a doctor should feel vexation at his patient for being sick. It is not a scientific frame of mind."

One of the difficulties the suffragists have contended with has been the inability to Convention Notes.

There are more men attending the sessions of the convention than ever before in the history of the suffrage movement. They seem to be "unattached" men, but they remain to the last minute.

Miss Anthony has a unique is rapped down by her, or supposed to be, but she seldom gets a chance. Miss An-thony watches the clock, and when the time thony watches the clock, and when the time is narrowed to five minutes, or three, she says: "My dear, your time is almost up." A little later she will say, "Just a minute now." Then she will tweak the gown of the speaker and say: "You'll have to quit; time's up." And if the speaker does not stop on the moment, Miss Anthony arises and stands resolutely beside the speaker, still tweaking the gown. It is really very funny, but "Aunt Susan" is gentle as a mother with her "girls," and she does not like to offend.

A few years ago Mrs. Harper was the managing editor of a political newspaper in a western town. It was a large town, and municipal affairs had not been managed just to the queen's taste, so the women, in the midst of a hot municipal campaign, did a very daring thing. They made up a ticket of their own, and Mrs. Harper championed this ticket "for all she was worth." Every mother's son on the ticket was elected, much to the surprise of everybody concerned.

She says that even in that particular the suffragists have made great strides, for this is the first time in the thirty-three years that the national suffrage convention has been coming to Washington when a scrap of private entertainment could be had for kny of the members. "Our ladies are the willing to pay good rates," she says, but many of them are not able to pay three and four dollars a day at the hotels, and brefer quieter quarters anyhow. the first remonstrants against suffrage in the Massachusetts legislature.

One day last summer, while Miss Anthony was taking a brief rest at her cosy little home in Rochester, which is filled with books and papers, priceless relics of her long struggle for temperance, freedom of the slaves and for woman suffrage, there was a meeting of the State Suffrage Association of New York in Rochester, and they expressed a desire to go over the historic old house. So Miss Anthony and her sister entertained the ladies of the convention at a reception, where the house was thrown open from garret to cellar, and the visitors permitted to roam as they tion at a reception, where the house was thrown open from garret to cellar, and the visitors permitted to roam as they pleased. Quite late, when all others had gone, came two or three belated ones, and among them a charmingly dressed little lady, who expressed a desire to visit the attic where had been written the biography of Miss Anthony, saying she would like that above all things. Miss Anthony herself escorted the lady to the attic and told her about the priceless letters and scrapbooks, the papers and magazines, which for half a century had been collecting there. Down stairs once more, the lady expressed the pleasure she had taken in the visit, and also in meeting Miss Anthony, and then she added: "But I cannot go away without telling you who I am. I am the secretary of the anti-suffrage association!" then shrank back as though expecting a caustic reply. Instead, Miss Anthony laid her hand on the lady's shoulder, and said earnestly, "Are you, indeed! Well now, my dear, just you go right on agitating against us. You are doing a splendid work! The more you talk about us the more you spread our fame. The fact that you hold such a respensible position shows that women have executive ability. Now come and see me again." And the lady says she went away uplifted and inspired by Miss Anthony's kind answer.
